A Countryman Abroad.

It is unnecessary for me at this late hour to attempt to give the inside PUBLISHERS AND PROPRIETORS. workings of the great convention which I honestly believe named the next president of this great republic. All the civilized world-has read of it before now. The hall with its numerous gatieries had scating capacity for fitteen thousand people, and every seat was taken not a vacant spotnot an lack of standing room leftmerrand women too. I guess there were on the inside of that hall about one thousand women crowding each other like hogs trying to get to the swill trough. I think the ugliest women I have ever seen, I saw in Chicago, I honestly believe I saw more sweet-faced girls to-day at church out in the country, than I saw during the whole week in Chicago. The women out there are lean, lank, hungry-looking creatures-all tanned and freekled-with long, bony cheeks--lack lustre eyes and unsymmetrical forms. They go moping about, sad eyed, dreary, dreamy looking creatures, and a proud, high DR. W. M. FUQUA, strung man, fresh from Kentucky. would conclude by looking at them that their whole life was a funeral march-their songs the wild, weird chants that come echoing back from the lost in the pale regions of the doomed. I would not, I could not love a Chicago girl. There is no place in this bosom for the image-

no niche in this heart for the face o

Chicago girl.

There were a number of prominent men there, men who handle the destinies of nations as a child handles its toys-men whose voices have charmed the dull cars of listening Senates for have, day in and day out, for long a nation's honor and glory-men whose voices have been heard high above the din of battle, the roar of Campbell & Medley cannon, the sharp clash of swords men went there not for a frolic, but -the men who ran it seemed to know the living camp-fires are gone out dollars that the latter was "out" exthat what is worth doing a tall, is forever. worth doing well. The nominating speeches were all good, except Townsend'sthe man who nominated Authur. This, in my humble opinion, was a failure. There are a hundred n.ea in this county who could have beaten it. It was dull, commonplace, and fell flat on the cars of the convention. In my humble opinion Judge West, the blind orator from Ohio, the man the editor answered: Because you advantage of the other on the score who placed Blaine's name before the convention, made by far the best stead of bringing them in person.speech.
